

What does recycling mean to me?

Imagine: a world where the streets have no garbage, the air is pollution free and where your kids have a safe place to play. It's hard to see that world as our own, but with work and dedication, it can be possible. Recycling should be a part of not only our present, but also our future, which is why recycling is important to me, as it will shape my future and my life.

Recycling means a lot to me, as it is the foundation for my future. My future is important to me because I want to know I will have a clean environment to live in. When I drive through the streets, I want them to be clean, not just now, but as well as in the future. When I go to college, I want to go to a clean campus. Even to take a stroll through the park, garbage should not be all over the place. Recycling is important to my future because I want to live in a safe and clean environment, where I know people are trying their best to keep everything clean.

How can we possibly not take care of our earth? Recycling is a big way of taking care of our earth, which is why recycling means being able to respect earth. If we use all of earth's resources, we will eventually be left with nothing. Earth can only give us so much, yet we expect a lot. Recycling means respect, because we live here, and we need to be able to show we know the value of what we have. It means being able to recycle paper, so we don't waste trees, or better yet, buying recycled paper. Our earth is our responsibility to keep clean, and we should have no excuses for not being able to do all that's possible to help.
